Canon powershot sx20 is screen not working

Yesterday I picked up an SX10 IS with the original box, papers etc. It appears to work fine except that the LCD screen is completely out. I'm wondering if any of you would happen to know how likely this would be remedied by replacing the LCD? I see that replacements are plentiful and inexpensive (which perhaps in itself says something) Thanks in advance. I took it apart and found nothing but checked connectors. It worked briefly then went blank again. It now sits on a shelf. It seems to be in the swivel connection points. I moved on to the SX40 / 50 / 60 and about to go with the 70. I doubt the 10 is really worth repairing but that's just my prognosis. To some extent uses and user preference matters most. In case it's your bridge that rotates displays (Disp button) between LCD and EVF, I'd take time to check settings and user manual to be sure that the LCD isn't simply properly deactivated. If that's not it, because it is a software switch, I'd try a Menu - Tools Icon - Reset All to take the camera back to its out of the box settings and try again. Only then would I look into hardware. I have no idea about LCD replacement, but as above, would be leery of putting much money, time or trouble into a second-hand camera as old as SX10, that might have other problems, too. Reply Reply with quote Reply to thread Complain Re: SX10 IS Dead LCD Screen Tried the SX10 with new batteries and a factory reset. The LCD does work when twisted fully around so the screen is in the screen out position. Swung straight out from there it stays on but any twist and it goes off. Definitely in the joint. Rheumatism perhaps. I gave it and other buttons a good dose of electrical contact spray and it's been good ever since - a different brand but this sort of spray with a narrow tube: Cheap 70% isopropyl alcohol from the drug store can work just as well. Important is residue free and let it dry thoroughly. Given that you have contact and functionality, it might do the trick if solvent penetrates to the right spot. Not having spray I recently unstuck a PC keyboard with iso, but clearly less sensitive than a camera, and it can be splashy. I did check and I don't see a setting to disable the LCD. I did do a "reset-all" and nothing changed. I notice that the manual says that closing the LCD display activates the viewfinder. Well the viewfinder on this camera is always active - is that normal? Or perhaps the camera thinks the door is closed? Rheumatism perhaps. Thanks!! Mine came alive just now when I rotated the screen all the way around AND turned it forward. I will now have to disassemble it and see if I can locate the problem. I notice that when the screen comes alive, the viewfinder turns off. Reply Reply with quote Reply to thread Complain Have you tried pressing the Display button on the function dial on the back of your camera a few times to see if that fixes it?Yes when your screen if folded into the camera with the screen facing the camera so you cannot see it the viewfinder turns on.And when the screen is turned around so you can see it the screen should come onThere was a similar problem someone had with the SX50HS and he got it back to working right by going into viewing mode to look at the pictures and then into the settings menu and doing a reset to defaults View solution in original post Image not available forColor: To view this video download Flash Player There seems to be a loose contact somewhere (or s.th. worse), but after a while working only once in a while, the LCD screen now doesn't work anymore at all. I've tried every kind of twisting rotating etc to eventually get back some contact, but without any success. Now, if I am lucky that it is only a loose contact, maybe one could fix it when opening the whole thing. Hence my question if someone has ever opened this camera, as I'm a bit afraid of breaking it when I try to do so, not being able to put it back together again.
